

should be. They foist it off onto the child. I went to grade school back in the days when we took county tests and we tested the child. Luckily I made it out of grade school and was allowed to go to high school but there was a concern out in Minden, Nebraska, I believe it was, called the Warp Publishing Company and they furnished the tests for the counties and we, in the grade schools, were taught so that we would pass that test and as long as we could do that we could go to high school following that. I think that the responsibility should lie with the adults and not with the child. I heard of an instance the other day, an actual fact, a private school in the central part of the state is running and this girl 10 years old had been attending for three years and she was sent to a public school because things weren't going right. What was the problem? Couldn't read and couldn't write her first name which was a four letter name. The problem was a learning disability. What do you do in a private school when there is no arrangement made for such a possibility? Do we just leave them there? It seems to me this Legislature has a responsibility whether we take it or not, whether we continue after all of these years of those on the Education Committee, still in the Education Committee have worked so hard to develop them to these minimal standards. A few terms have become bad over the years. For example, "politician" started out as a pretty good word, now it is a lousy word. The term "profit" was a good word fifteen, twenty years ago. Nowadays some people look on it with disdain. Now the "certification of teachers" used to be all right. All of a sudden it is a dirty word. It is lousy. It is terrible. Everybody that is certified is no good. Wrong, wrong as it can be. There is nothing wrong with becoming a certified teacher and possibly the name "Christian schools" is starting to get a bad name. I hate to hear it. I like the Christian schools. Most of them are operating, I understand 95 percent operating within the law and not having any problem, but because we choose not...Christian...certified teachers, we get in a hubbub here and want to make...we want to let down the bars. We want to do what is easy. We want to do what the Task Force did, cop out in an easy way and act like a Supreme Court saying it is unconstitutional. We can do the same thing. It seems to me that the minimal requirements
